

MELLINGER EDWARD HENRY:
PAPERS (1910-1944)

An Inventory and Index of American Folksong Materials

PREFACE

This guide was prepared in conjunction with an introductory course in archival methodology taught by Professor Megan Sniffin-Marinoff of the Graduate Program in Library and Information Sciences at Simmons College, Boston. The project was carried out between September and December, 1989, and was supervised throughout by Mark N. Brown, Curator of Manuscripts at the John Hay Library, Providence.

My intention was to provide research access to Mellinger Henry's papers, specifically, to make available information pertaining to the materials on American folk songs and ballads, of which Mr. Henry was an avid and reputable collector.

The project involved systematically going through the archival boxes and folders and entering information about their contents into a database using a personal computer and commercially available software.¹ The database has allowed lists to be compiled according to various criteria, each of which gives users a "point of access" for the Henry Papers. Several of those lists are reproduced in this guide.

I wish to extend deepest thanks to the entire staff of the John Hay Library for their patience, cooperation and excellent service over the past few months. They certainly made my task an easier one.

INTRODUCTION

Mellinger Edward Henry (1873-1946) graduated from Brown University in the Class of 1899. He entered the teaching field, becoming a professor of English at Dickinson High School in Jersey City, New Jersey. Mr. Henry was an avid hiker and belonged to numerous mountain clubs up and down the Appalachian chain. He married Florence Stokes (August 3, 1921) whose family had ties to Georgia. Together, the Henrys made numerous sojourns in the Blue Ridge and Great Smoky Mountain region of Eastern Tennessee and Western North Carolina. In 1923, on one of their trips, they heard Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, deliver a lecture on American ballads and folksongs, and almost immediately began their collecting of songs from the people they encountered in the mountain back country.¹

Once they had established the nucleus of a collection, Mellinger Henry began corresponding with other folksong scholars who were doing or endorsing similar work in various parts of the U.S. Among those individuals offering initial encouragement were Harvard professor, George Lyman Kittredge, and Robert Winslow Gordon, founder of the Archive of American Folksong at the Library of Congress. During the next fifteen years, the Henrys devoted much time to securing ballads and songs, traveling south from New Jersey during Mr. Henry's summer vacations. Mrs. Henry was trained musically and was able to take down tunes for many of the pieces, while Mellinger Henry concerned himself with researching variants and sources of the song texts. His correspondence with other scholars grew and he published numerous articles in the Journal of American Folklore, the New Jersey Journal of Education, and other journals. In 1934, his first book, Songs Sung in the Southern Appalachians, was published in London by the Mitre Press. Beech Mountain Folk Songs and Ballads, a collaborative effort with Maurice Matteson, was published in 1936 by G. Schirmer. This was followed in 1937 by Henry's Bibliography for the Study of American Folk-Songs, also published by Mitre Press. In 1939, Folk Songs of the Southern Highlands was published in New York by J. J. Augustin.

Mellinger Henry was interested—as were other ballad scholars of the time—in the literary heritage of folksong poetry and the effects of oral transmission, but Mr. Henry's interest went beyond that of mere "arm chair" study, as he admired and felt an affinity with the people whom he perceived as living "the outdoor life" of which he was so fond. He encouraged—through editorials, articles and lectures—the opening up of the Blue Ridge Mountain region for vacationers and especially the creation of trail networks for hikers and climbers. The National Park Service was beginning to take an interest in the region, and several of Mr. Henry's singer-informants found themselves forced to sell their land and relocate as a result of the establishment of the Great Smoky Mountain National Park in the 1920s.

¹ For a brief but informative account of the Henrys' collecting activities, written by Mrs. Henry, see "The Ballad-Hunting Henrys" in North Carolina Folklore VII: 1 (July, 1959) pp. 32-34.

Over the years, Mellinger Henry made a point of sending reprints of his published journal articles to various colleagues and mentors, including Harry Lyman Koopman and S. Foster Damon, both connected with the Brown University Library. It was presumably due in part to their encouragement—and Mellinger Henry's fond memories of his alma mater—that Mrs. Henry decided, after her husband's death in 1946, to donate his papers to the John Hay Library.

Today, there is a quiet but steady flow of reissued vintage folklore field recordings, and considerable attention is being focused on the southern American scene during the first half of this century. Mellinger Henry's papers throw light not only on his own work but on the entire field of folksong studies during the 1920s and 1930s, a time when scholars were publishing seminal collections and debating the so-called "communal" theories of the origins of folksong. The papers also offer some insight into the opening of the southern mountains to tourism, and offer possibilities for investigating the interaction between local and "outside elements." Above all, there is the chance to find out more about the traditions and the region that Mellinger Henry loved and worked so hard to document and share with others.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Mellinger Henry Papers (1910-1944) provide insight into Mr. Henry's two major interests— trail hiking and folksong collecting, with emphasis on the latter. To a great extent, the hiking and folksong materials are intermingled since Mr. Henry's collecting activities were frequently undertaken in the context of outdoor vacation trips in the mountains of North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky. The papers reflect the later years of Henry's life, with the bulk of the correspondence beginning around the time he was forty years old.

Included are twenty-six archival boxes containing 499 folders of research notes and typescript working copies of song texts, as well as incidental correspondence from singer-informants, and drafts of Henry's essays, most of which were published in academic journals. Of particular interest are the letters and penciled copies of ballad texts written out for the Henrys by their mountain friends, including Granville Gadsey, members of the Harmon family, Mary Tucker, and others. Also included is a sizeable group of folksongs which reflect the collecting efforts of university students of Professor Artus Moser in North Carolina and sent to Henry. A noticeable absence from the Henry materials are songs collected from North Carolina singer and dulcimer maker, Nathan Hicks. While the Correspondence Series contains a few letters from Hicks and his wife, it is known that many songs were taken down from the Hickses which are not found among these papers.

Two boxes contain drafts of Mellinger Henry's speeches, toasts, editorials, and articles on hiking and issues of education, and reflect something of his involvement in the affairs of Dickinson High School, the Brown Class of 1899, and various trail and hiking clubs.

There are three boxes containing folders with correspondence arranged alphabetically by sender, and sub-arranged by date. These letters show Mellinger Henry's remarkable network of contacts and colleagues in the scholarly world of folksong studies. Among the individuals represented are: Phillips Barry, Henry M. Belden, Ruth Benedict, John C. Campbell, Olive Dame Campbell, John Harrington Cox, S. Foster Damon, Arthur Kyle Davis, Jr., William Doerflinger, Fannie Hardy Eckstorm, Mary Olive Eddy, Harvey H. Fuson, Gordon H. Gerould, Robert Winslow Gordon, George Herzog, Arthur Palmer Hudson, Sigurd B. Hustvedt, George Pullen Jackson, Guy B. Johnson, George Korson, Alton C. Morris, Artus Moser, Louise Pound, Mary Winslow Smyth, and Evelyn K. Wells. The numerous letters from Fannie Eckstorm of Maine reveal much about the methodology of tracing ballad fragments, while the letters from Mary O. Eddy of Ohio, Harvey Fuson of Kentucky, and others show that Mellinger Henry was not alone in his frustration regarding getting his collections of folksongs published. Henry was instrumental in helping the White Top Folk Festival in Virginia gain momentum, and he was also a founding member of the Southeastern Folksong Society; both institutions are discussed with various correspondents. Other topics which might be of interest to researchers include the debate over the "communal" origins of folksong, and the importance of studying tunes and texts together.

In addition to information about the field of folksong collecting, the letters between Henry, J. T. Bailie [a lawyer?], and John W. Oliver of Cade's Cove, Tennessee hint at what must have been a significant issue regarding the U. S. National Park system. Oliver, and other mountain residents, were forced to sell their land to the federal government for the creation of the Great Smoky Mountain National Park in the 1920s. Oliver took his case to the courts, and the letters report the unfolding of that case, though not in great detail.¹

Additional items relating to Mellinger Henry and his work include two as-yet-unprocessed packets containing drafts of materials pertaining to Henry's published books, Songs Sung in the Southern Appalachians and Folk Songs of the Southern Highlands. These books and several other published works by Henry may be accessed through the main card catalog.

3. CORRESPONDENCE (Correspondence BOXES 1-3). Correspondence (1910-1944) with scholars, colleagues, friends, informants, publishers, librarians, Brown classmates, etc.

4. BOOK MATERIALS (2 PACKETS). Drafts and duplicate copies of introductory materials for Songs Sung in the Southern Appalachians and Folk Songs from the Southern Highlands.

SERIES DESCRIPTION

1. FOLKSONG AND BALLAD FILES (BOXES 1-26).

Songs are filed individually in numbered folders. The first folder in Box 1 is marked "Indexes" and contains typescript lists of songs and ballads collected by Mellinger Henry. One of these— "A List of Ballads and Folk-Songs Collected by Mellinger E. Henry, Ridgefield, N.J."— contains 581 titles. The arrangement of folders 1-499 follows the order of the song titles given on this list, and thus, reflects an order originally established by Mellinger Henry. Incidental essays and correspondence are to be found scattered throughout the folders.

Series 1 is represented in this guide by:

- 1) An INVENTORY, listing the titles in sequence, box by box, folder by folder. This list includes the titles of essays as well as ballads and folksongs, and also gives the singer-informant's name, and the place and date the song was collected.
- 2) A TITLE INDEX, listing songs and essays alphabetically by title, and giving the box and folder number. By locating the box / folder number in the INVENTORY section, the user may identify the singer-informant of a particular title.

2. HIKING AND EDUCATION FILES (BOXES 27-28).

Materials are in unnumbered folders. Most of the articles, speeches, etc. were written in pencil on newsprint, which owing to its acidity, has become quite brittle. Therefore, most items have been photocopied, the copies also being in the folders. No arrangement was determined at the time of preparing this guide.

Series 2 is represented in this guide by:

- 1) An INVENTORY, briefly describing the contents of each folder. As the folders are not numbered, numbers have been assigned and placed in brackets to indicate the order in which the folders appeared in the two boxes at the time this list was prepared.

3. CORRESPONDENCE FILES (CORRESPONDENCE BOXES 1-3)

The boxes are labeled A-E (Box 1), F-H (Box 2), and I-Z (Box 3), reflecting the alphabetical arrangement of the correspondence series. Folders are labeled with a letter of the alphabet or with the name of an individual or organization. Also appearing on the folders is a number in brackets, indicating the total number of items contained in the folder. The correspondence is filed either by the last name of the individual— sender or recipient— or by the name of the organization or institution with which that person was affiliated. The index of correspondents given in this guide allows the researcher to find letters from one person which may be scattered in different folders.

Series 3 is represented in this guide by:

- 1) An INVENTORY, listing correspondence box by box, folder by folder, giving sender, recipient, dates spanned by the correspondence, and the number of items represented.

- 2) A SENDER INDEX, with entries listed alphabetically, giving sender, recipient, dates spanned by correspondence, and number of items, and identifying the box and folder location for each entry.

4. BOOK MATERIALS (2 PACKETS).

These materials are bound in portfolio type packets and have not been placed in archival boxes or folders. No attempt was made to inventory these materials.

USING THE INVENTORY & INDEX

GENERAL REMARKS

The lists given in this guide should be used only as a finding aid for the Mellinger Henry Papers, not as a primary source for folksong scholarship.

1. FOLKSONG AND BALLAD FILES (BOXES 1-26).

- Entries in QUOTATION MARKS indicate an essay or article title.
- Song titles given in BRACKETS have been supplied by the compiler of this guide, and do not reflect titles listed by Mellinger Henry. They are, in most cases, well-known titles for a given song and therefore offer added possibilities for identifying seemingly obscure entries. The decision to supply these titles was made on a case by case basis as the index was prepared, and no attempt was made either at standardization of supplied titles or further research.
- CHILD NUMBERS. The late nineteenth century compilation of English and Scottish popular ballads by Harvard professor, Francis James Child, formed a literary canon to which most folksong collectors in the early twentieth century related their findings. Using Child numbers allowed collectors to identify and order variants of ballad plots, even when the effects of oral transmission had rendered them radically different in text. The Child numbers in the inventory and index are as given by Mellinger Henry and have not been checked against other sources.
- Information regarding NAMES, LOCATIONS, AND DATES was gleaned only from the Mellinger Henry Papers. No comparison has been made against Mr. Henry's published books. Some names and places have been standardized for ease of comparison when using the lists. Thus, "Mrs.

Morrow" has been expanded to "Mrs. E. P. Morrow," etc. Also, some songs were collected through the cooperation of several individuals. In most cases, only the primary informant has been included in the inventory / index.

- Some songs appear in the folders without titles. Mellinger Henry sometimes supplied titles, or else simply marked the song "No Title," "No Local Title," "Fragment...," "Negro Song," etc. In many cases, the singer wrote out the words and sent them to the Henry's with the words "Song Ballet," etc. heading the page. While some of these generic titles have been included in the index, many were not, especially in cases where the singer simply called the song a "ballet" and Mellinger Henry cited other titles.

2. HIKING AND EDUCATION FILES (BOXES 27-28).

- The folders in this series are not numbered. Bracketed numbers in the inventory refer to the order the folders appear in the two boxes.

3. CORRESPONDENCE FILES (CORRESPONDENCE BOXES 1-3)

- No record was made of incidental correspondence appearing in folders 1 - 499 of Series 1: FOLKSONGS AND BALLADS.
- The bracketed number under the "Box.Folder" heading indicates the total number of items held in that folder. This number was present on the folder at the time this inventory / index was prepared.

4. BOOK MATERIALS (2 PACKETS).

- These materials are bound in portfolio type packets and have not been placed in archival boxes or folders. No attempt was made to inventory these materials.
